Performance Returns

The SPARX OneAsia Long Short UCITS Fund finished down -2.07% in the month of November.

Investment Objective & Strategy

The investment objective of the fund is to maximise risk-adjusted returns regardless of the market cycle by investing in equity within Asia including Japan. The strategy aims to capitalize on Asia's growth dynamics by identifying potential winners and losers through bottom-up fundamental research.

Market Commentary

In November, our top negative contributor was a short position in a Chinese infant formula maker that also owns an Australian health supplements brand. The share price of the company rallied during the month on the back of an announcement by the Chinese government to delay the implementation of the proposed cross-border e-commerce regulation from April 2017 to the end of 2017. As a result, the company now has several more months to prepare and establish a proper sales channels (off-line and on-line) beyond the ubiquitous parallel import channel.

We believe, however, the earnings capacity of the company in the coming year will be less than half of what the street expects. Sources of potential earnings downgrade include: (1) the registration process of nutrition products in mainland China could take 1 to 2 years; (2) the official channel development and brand building could lead to significant margin erosion; (3) net profit (ex-minority) from the Australian nutrition product business is expected to be lower than the recurring interest expense and forex hedging cost from USD 950mn debt funding to buy the business; and (4) its infant formula business continues to lose its ground from its offline baby specialty stores and high-end product focus strategy which is facing fierce competition.

During the month, we trimmed and exited a few positions both from our longs and shorts to reflect our current views on the companies and to take advantage of share price volatility that has resulted from drastic sector rotations within the Asian equity markets.
