Giano UCITS Fund

Long/Short Equity

January 2021

Short Equity exposure is not a good place to be in a regime with GDP accelerating and inflation accelerating and has been hit particularly hard in US toward the end of January triggered by retail investors piling into some of the most shorted stocks; it has created increased volatility for the overall market.

Source: J.P. Morgan, Bloomberg Finance L.P.

I don't see what has happened as - yet - the sign of the beginning of a bear market in high growth, highly valued stocks that many investors expect. We are monitoring prices and - admittedly - it could be different this time, but the price signals that are usually present at the end of a bubble are not there now. Valuations of many stocks are extremely high (see chart) and the participation of retail investors are very important warning signals but not enough, as yet, to call the end, in my view.

Long/Short Equity

Monthly Commentary cont.

The current strong recovery in global GDP and earnings, friendly monetary policy, and a high scepticism by investors (as measured by implied/realised volatilities) are all weighing on the bullish side; these can change direction quickly but they are unlikely to change direction dramatically over the next quarter or so.

European stock markets corrected a bit in the last week of January from a stretched position also helped by a correction - upward - of the dollar and by the turmoil caused by the short squeeze in US stocks.

A lot of the positioning indicators have now turned bullish except for the short exposure which is extremely low (so it is still bearish as it is used as a contrarian indicator).

The reason the Fund was down in January was a correction in its main position Plus500.
