Monthly Commentary

The S&P was up 12.2% and the Eurostoxx up 7.6%.

Stock markets had a very good month driven by the partial correction of an extremely bearish positioning at the beginning of the month, lower long rates and a decent delivery of 2nd quarter earnings.

This bounce is likely only temporary as many factors that lead stock market performance are deteriorating.

July 2022

Our Barometer continues to signal a recession. Most reliable measures of wage inflation in the US are showing a substantial increase which will not allow the FED to relax;

PMIs around the world are signalling a substantial deceleration in production activity; they also show very high inventories (at multi-decades high) which will take time to be absorbed.

On the inflationary front, the good news is that for most of the world, energy prices have stabilised; however that is not evident in Europe given the increase in gas prices due to the Ukrainian war. Few speak of the importance of energy prices for the cost of food production with its inflationary and social implications.

Europe seems inclined to monetise a lot of the price increases which, in the short term, is protecting the consumer but affecting the Euro exchange rate.

In the next phase, earnings are going to see significant downgrades a consequence of the high inventories mentioned above - it is also important to note that it is not necessary to be in an economic recession to witness a downturn in earnings (2015-16 is a good example).

While we have seen very large redemptions from equities in EM funds and European funds we haven't seen that happening yet in US. I am not yet sure what is going to trigger that but we are mindful of the implications of a further unwinding of positions on stock prices.
