September 2021

Performance Returns

The Crabel Advanced Trend UCITS Fund returned -1.83% during the month of September (USD Founder Class).

Investment Objective & Strategy

The Crabel Advanced Trend UCITS Fund traded to a loss of -1.00% in August, which reduced the year-to-date return to +2.84%. The equities sector exhibited a bullish environment overall in August. Despite a mid-month dip, by the end of August many equity markets closed at all-time highs. As a result of the consistent uptrend, five of the 10 strongest performing markets were equities. On the other hand, the energy sub-sector within commodities stood out as a difficult trading environment. Most energy instruments reversed recent bullish moves, trading to monthly lows two and a half weeks into the month. Though many markets rallied back to unchanged by month's end, Advanced Trend's medium-term trend following posture in the sector caused some whipsaws and a negative attribution. The foreign exchange and fixed income sectors also had negative attributions. As has been the case over the past four months, smaller markets were the main culprit. For example, the Korean Won and Indian Rupee were among the most difficult markets in foreign exchange. Similarly in fixed income, the German Bobl, Euro-BTP Italian Government Bond, and Euro-OAT French Government Bond were also among the most challenging markets. Overall, Advanced Trend is positioned with a risk-on bias, although long equities exposures are somewhat balanced by net longs in fixed income. Commodities positioning is generally long and would benefit from inflationary pressures, while the foreign exchange posture remains modestly short the US Dollar.

Monthly Commentary

The Crabel Advanced Trend UCITS Fund traded to a loss of -1.83% in September, which reduced the year-to-date return to +0.96%. Despite a challenging month overall, the commodities sector traded to a strong positive attribution in September. Within commodities, energy markets were particularly valuable as prices continued to climb across the complex. Seven of the ten strongest performing markets on the month were commodities, and six of those seven were energy markets. Frustratingly, the three other sectors all traded to negative attributions as major long-term trends were disrupted during the month. Equity markets produced the largest monthly loss. In the US, the S&P 500 Index saw its largest decline in over a year, following seven straight months of positive performance. Foreign exchange price action was dominated by US Dollar appreciation. While several foreign exchange markets were valuable, including the Turkish Lira and the Japanese Yen, others, particularly smaller markets in Europe, were challenging, including the Hungarian Forint and Polish Zloty. As equity markets sold off, fixed income instruments at first showed little reaction, particularly in the US, before rallying strongly to conclude the month. Five of the 10 worst performing markets for Advanced Trend in September were non-US fixed income markets. The Euro-OAT French Government Bond and German Bund were two of the five most difficult markets on the month. The downward trend in those markets over the last several months was sharply reversed in the risk-off environment surrounding the German federal election. For the year, the commodity sector is now the strongest performer for Advanced Trend by a wide margin. Despite the strong reversal in September, the equities sector remains positive on the year. The foreign exchange and fixed income sectors are both meaningful detractors year-to-date in 2021.
